In a motor vehicle provided with a device of this type, when a larger motor vehicle collides with a smaller motor vehicle, a portion of the smaller motor vehicle is propelled forwards or to the side of the larger motor vehicle due to the inertia caused by the velocity gained in the collision of the larger motor vehicle with the smaller motor vehicle and this portion comes into direct contact with the larger motor vehicle at a relatively high speed. If the larger motor vehicle is not provided with a device of this type, the shock generated by the collision of the larger motor vehicle with the smaller motor vehicle is absorbed by a dashboard or the like. If such a larger motor vehicle is provided with a shock absorbing device as described above, the shock of the larger motor vehicle with the smaller motor vehicle is absorbed by the device. Accordingly, the smaller motor vehicle is allowed to come into contact with a portion of the larger motor vehicle with the lesser shock and the smaller motor vehicle is prevented from being deformed or damaged due to the collision with the larger motor vehicle. An example of a device of this type is a collapsible vehicle body made of an elastic material and provided with a plate shaped base plate. When the larger motor vehicle hits the collapsible vehicle body, the collapsible vehicle body is allowed to collapse in a direction in which the base plate comes into contact with the larger motor vehicle. According to this shock absorbing device, the larger motor vehicle is prevented from being deformed.
