the bbrs covers an area of approximately 20 000 square kilometers. most of the bbrs lies within the west marine reserve (wmr) and is mainly located between the northern tip of ambergris caye and the south end of glovers reef. much of the area consists of relatively shallow lagoons with sand and coral substrates, a very suitable type of habitat for most of the reef-dwelling fish species. all sites of the serial property face the threat of sediment and nutrient pollution from the mainland and the discharge of untreated waste from many commercial and residential operations along the coast. the bbrs is very close to the commercial port of placencia. the recent massive bleaching was caused by the el nino event. this also happens every 15-20 years. normally, bleaching occurs at the end of a global el nino event. the last large bleaching event occurred in 1998. the maximum bleaching of 48% of the corals occurred in the great barrier reef. at that time there were only few mobile phones, which were no phones at all. people didn't know what was going on and didn't realized the damage they are causing. it is not a new phenomenon that marine life is being threatened by the temperature change in the ocean. coral reefs are the best testament to the effect that climate change is having on the ocean, as they were formed in the last 50 million years. but why are they in trouble? the ocean is warming. coral reefs live in the ocean, where warm water rises to the surface. as a result, the coral and other marine life are suffering from the effects of warming oceans.
