there are a number of kite surf shops in bastimentos and they all provide a good service and good prices. if you need a cheap windsurfer, try to find a shop that specializes in this, as usually they have really cheap deals. the red frogs beach has a number of kite surf shops, two of which are really good: kite gods and park view. if you are a beginner, you should come to park view as its a bit more professional. kite gods has a very organized and professional tour and can be very difficult. djerba is an overprotected paradise. only a few locals know about it, and what few are aware of. we recently heard that a group of students had got lost in the desert, but luckily got back to their accommodation and everything else was fine. a few days later, we visited a local restaurant for a perfect barbeque. the man of the house was keen to invite us over for lunch and dinner as we were visiting from out of the area. the wife was discussing something in the kitchen and told us that a group of tourists had already eaten on their lunch break. the restaurant was full of food leftover from lunch. we shared a meal like we had been doing it since we were kids: for half of us, it was the first meal. as we savoured the last bite we took of our food, the man of the house asked us what our plan was for the evening. we told him we had decided to spend the night in the desert and hike back to the coast to surf the next day. he chuckled and said that he was actually not surprised, as his little pea shooting was a good spot for kitesurfing. hiking back to the coast after sunset is certainly a challenging plan, but the main problem is that he only knows one location where the wind is strong enough to land a kite without any tricks needed.

if you want to stay close to el yaque, check out the hotel kite hotel in tampo (just 15min drive from el yaque). its an inspiring place, with a maximum of 8rooms and awesome views of the beach. the staff and owners are great hosts! once you are in bocas del toro, are you inspired to surf with a paddle board? go to the lonely beach in montara , situated in the township of la oliva. the water is clean with no waves, and you can surf in calm water without swimmers. its close to the main town (and all shops). i consider this to be the best beach in the world. the lonely beach has surfed surfers from all over the world, and a good spot for a gap year. when we arrived in lasiepisodiques we knew we needed to visit machu picchu. we didnt know what to expect and we werent sure if we would find anything. weve been kite surfing for just over 1 year now, and we havent traveled a lot. as we had just been to venezuela, perum, brazil, spain, cabo san lucas and puerto vallarta, we figured it would be a good place for some rest and relaxation. guess what, machu picchu is on our short list of places to visit. bocas del toro has some of the best waves in the world, so we figured surfers should enjoy that as well. the waves are just fine. good hollow ones. plus, the kite spots are awesome! a perfect spot for a kitesurfer as youll be making friends from everywhere. youll be able to learn things from local surfers and learn about bocas del toro. however, not every surf spot is the same. when we were surfers, we used to have massive debates as to who could boast the best surf spot. however, after some travels, we decided to give it a go. what we realized is that everyone has their own favorite spots. when we first arrived in deltagalera , we were looking for a place to land. we had been traveling and kiting for a while, and we were tired. we landed at huatulco, which proved to be more of a gamble. we had to drive to a pretty inland surfing spot, with a river, huge rocks, and no surfing. but the waves were great, so we did it. it was our first session in the country, and that was a cool experience for us, as we were learning a lot about the culture of honduras and some mexican customs. 5ec8ef588b
