6. [add new] hire hearth member will require more than one hours to complete the preparation. a hearth member will be enabled to accept the invitation for the first time after the preparation is completed, which can't be opened again. the reason is that we'll find that some of the hearth members are not willing to accept the invitation after the preparation was completed. 11. [add new] the hearth inviter can invite others to his hearth, and can set the time limit for the invitation. after the time limit has passed, he will be prompted that the invite has been expired and will be removed. the invitees can accept the invitation at any time. 13. [add new] the hearth inviter can now invite new members to the hearth, and can set the time limit for the invitation. after the time limit has passed, he will be prompted that the invite has been expired and will be removed. one of the most annoying elements of diablo 3 was the auction house itself. thankfully, blizzard entertainment will be removing the auction house altogether. the company's lead game designer, jay wilson, explained the decision to gamespot during a livestream. prior to the removal of the auction house, diablo 3 was a very easy game to get into. but as soon as players started to acquire items, they often found that their items were far inferior to others' items, making it difficult to progress in the game. blizzard entertainment wanted players to have that same feeling of accomplishment whenever they acquired items. "auction house made it less of an achievement," wilson explained. "it was such a chore. it's not fun. you're not excited when you win a bid. you're excited when you have a chance to defeat a monster. it wasn't a fun activity in the game."

Game 3D Utopia Origin: Hack Items After Update Version All Pro

blizzard has decided that they'll allow players to buy the items they want with real money, but only if they intend to use it. the auction house was a huge, ugly, messy space that was used by money-hungry cheaters to acquire items for resale on the market. this new system would force players to hand over actual cash for items they intend to use, and only for items that will be used. only people who actually intend to use the gold will be able to sell it off, because they'll be the only ones who care enough to do so. instead of the painfully inefficient bartering system, players will be able to buy and sell items directly, and with confidence that their items are safe. it's a brilliant move, and a major win for gamers. all that said, the company is careful to not slap a piece of drm on diablo 3. the community outcry over the auction house was so bad that blizzard had to ensure their new economy would be an ethical and fair one. players who use the new system will be required to transfer their items into a personal auction house, where they'll be placed into a pool of items. items will be sold by blizzard to those who wish to purchase them, and players who don't use the system will have their items destroyed. this design of a personal auction house is a far cry from the way the company originally sold its items. players would have been forced to purchase items from the auction house, and would have been unable to sell their items to anyone else. blizzard has decided to make it so that the items will be locked away from the general public, and will be only available to its player base. 5ec8ef588b
