the second work is a collage of ephemeral, fragmented images, orchestrated and played by a gamelan. the title is taken from the first movement of the sukata by indonesian composer i gusti. the piece opens with a view of rangda, the goddess of time, brushing the past away. the music progresses in uncoordinated, sometimes frenetic passages, punctuated by the intermittent explosion of a solo gamelan trumpet. the piece closes with the sound of thunder and concludes with a lightning bolt, heralding rangda and ushering in the new cycle of time. (resume updated by concerto committee in 2016 from reliable online sources.) sustained notes, melodic layering and transposing over an ethereal romantic harmonic backdrop make this work ideal for tonal adventures of any shape. it truly speaks to the listener with its brilliantly polished and polished presentation. audra makes a model of clarity and wit. the piece is a sign of the composer gaining more confidence and a different angle of sight, a view from the outside, an understanding of what something is and how it works. you can hear this in audra's flowing lines and in her work with the piano. she is the master of expression and the capacity to convey her work in a way other than her own music. she creates a certain unity in her music by her imaginative use of musical language. (resume updated by concerto committee in 2016 from reliable online sources.) an altissimo closing note and blazing glissando of the percussion and a final fiery flourish from the soloists mark the conclusion of the piece. it is a joyful finale that will provoke a reaction of jubilation or of a more contemplative, reflective mood. 5ec8ef588b
