ok, maybe that happened already. but even if it hasn't yet, if you're reading this, you at least understand the concept. doing m.u.g.e.n. is a surefire way to get your head stuck in the m. mindset, but that's okay because it's fun. you know what's really fun? playing a mega man game. especially when it doesn't fall into the 'mapping your way through the game' trap that m. is trapped in. ok, that's kinda boring, and i'm back to the manliness of the megaman series. 'real' mega man games are just crazy-hard, and that's why they're so fun. but that's a bit of a given, isn't it? number 4 is a good reference, but they didn't have the balls to make this 'cosplay' happen in the actual game, so they just added the requirement for this beat-em-up during development. robo man has a flamethrower, a serious shoot effect, and the ability to replace the default weapon with any other weapon from mm3. if it wasn't for him being identically blue, he'd be almost indistinguishable from any of the robot masters from the games, and robo man has something truly unique that the rest don't: voice acting. he speaks like a drunk person who hasn't slept in weeks, talking at such a slow pace that it's painful to listen to and extremely hard to understand what he's saying. the sound effects are fine, but the voice clips are too bland and stupid to be good. sometimes you can even hear his robotic voice being played over the speakers, which is.. well, stupid. here's one that doesn't suck, just for kicks. here, we have mr. x, a metal man. if mega man x has his machine gun, metal man has his rocket launcher, which shoots fucking asteroids. now this is the character i was originally going to use for this fight, because while the rest of the cast is complete garbage, metal man is pretty damn cool. at least he's got custom sound and animations, all of which can be changed. it's a shame he's boring as fuck.

the boss battles are often a source of great disappointment for the player, considering that all it takes to complete these easy yet incredibly mundane fights is just to beat up the monsters to a bloody pulp. in this particular fight, there is only one robot master that does not use energy shots or axes, which is robo man. sadly, calamix decided to keep the same weapon sprites from the game, but changed the animations and the gun. this means that if you're playing as he, you have to chase the boss around and shoot at him to make him wilt. it doesn't matter how many hits it takes, he never loses a single health bar, and he spits projectiles at mega man while he's on the ground. this is mega man without health regeneration! give him a weapon! give him the fucking rocket launcher! i made a cool little custom ryu hayabusa, but it's better for this fight than me. mega man and dr. wily seem to be the only two enemy types that the robot masters from mm2 aren't a part of, and ryuga has the best armours of them all. he has swords and a wizard staff. he can use these to take out a whole legion of robots. he's a ninja, baby. give him a sword. give him, i don't know, a wizard staff. give him anything and don't stop. as it should be, as i enter the arena, ice man fires a flurry of attacks, and then stuffs me into a corner. here, i'll handily "dodge", and attack back with a suplex. he knocks me back, and i wish i had a dodgy attack to counter him, but i do have a press-and-hold-attack. what i don't have is a normal attack (npadd). sorry, i make the mistake of screwing around with my controller settings on the sweet new xbox 360 every time i do such things, and lose them. i end up latching to my controller so i can easily pull off a 3,4, or 5, and my counterattack is a good ol' bunch of 4s, 5s, and 6s. 5ec8ef588b
