The Phantom Flex4K incorporates powerful autofocus (AF) mechanisms that utilize two layers of focus detection, with the capability to focus at any distance up to infinity. With the choice of a Z-series Canon or Nikon lens and fully customizable focus point patterns, the Flex4K is suitable for most commercial applications. Check your operating systems capabilities. The Phantom Flex4K is not backward compatible with Windows 95,98,ME,NT,2000,XP. The Phantom Flex4K can be used with Mac OS X 10.2 or later and your operating system can be upgraded later. The Phantom Flex4K does not have H.264 hardware encoder. If you have Mac OS X 10.6 or later and your operating system is not compatible with Mac OS X 10.5 or later, you cannot use Mac OS X 10.6 or later, you can get from Apple. Used in the Halloween 2011 review , The Phantom FlexHD is still a very capable high resolution camera at a lower price. It does still have some high resolution limitations, such as no 4:4:4 conversion from a master tape, and no high bit rate compression. The Phantom FlexHD looks a lot like the other FlexHD series cameras and it can be directly connected to a computer via firewire. A Firewire 400 port is available on the rear of the camera. The Phantom FlexHD records at a slower, 1,000fps, not 3,000fps, just like the Phantom Flex4K. It also has a frame rate of 4:2:2 or 4:4:4, not full 1080p or 4k. The Phantom FlexHD's file size limitation is only 2G, not 16G. The Phantom FlexHD line has changed, it's now more a 13.3" screen, and the price has gone up, but it has certainly held up its own against the competition and its specs are very good. While most of the other high end cameras are much smaller, the smaller size may be a hindrance in some types of situations. In either case, most any DSLR will do in many respects.
