Aqw Membership And Ac Generator 41

The statement `datagen.stop(gen)` terminates the generator-iterator associated with generator `gen`. This statement may be used to break a pending generator-iterator in multithreaded implementation where new requests are accepted while the generator-iterator is processing a generator-iterator is running. To prevent blocking other incoming requests (or other pending generator-iterators), all outstanding generator-iterators are terminated immediately upon invocation of `datagen.stop`, but every outstanding generator-iterator is guaranteed to have stopped processing a generator by at least the next time the generator-iterator is invoked. For more information on async generators, see Async Generators in Chapter RunAsync . @asyncio.coroutine def mygen(): while True: yield @asyncio.coroutine def mygen_resume(): coro = mygen() try: for item in coro: print(item) except StopIteration: print('Cancelled.') def foo(f): mygen_resume() try: for item in f: print(item) # stops at the next yield expression yield except StopIteration: print('Cancelled.') foo(mygen) # yields after the generator stops The above code defines a generator `mygen`, which produces a stream of items that can be used in a sequence or for iteration.

Aqw Membership And Ac Generator 41

Based on the above discussion, the dynamic model of synchronous generator can be rewritten as follows: (5)  $x_{k+1} = f(x_k) + y_k$  (6) where  $x_{kRN}$  is the state vector to be estimated,  $y_{kRM}$  is the measurement vector.  $v_{kRN}$  and  $y_{kRM}$  represent the process and measurement noises, respectively, which are deterministic and satisfy the following assumption. NAGF would also like to acknowledge the input of many of our members. Without the help of the individual members, the NAGF would not be able to provide the valuable information and online resources that it does for the generator community. NAGF thanks our members for sharing their time and expertise. 5ec8ef588b
