Total.War.Rome.II.Empire.Divided.Update.v2.3.0.Build.18462-C ODEX Cheat Codes

We are almost done with Total War Rome: II. Empire. We may not have time to test the next patch, but if we can get into a state where we have all the rough edges sorted out, then we should be able to have the first playtest patch out in the next week or so. This is NOT the same as cheating in sports. Cheating in that case is a rational strategy that leads to higher expected gain (you get something for nothing). It is a rational strategy if you are in a game where you have a choice between an action that has a lower expected gain and an action that has higher expected gain, but not an action with higher expected gain and an action with lower expected gain. The justification for cheating in that case comes from a rationality framework, and it is reasonable in the sense that if you were both rational and honest (e.g. most people are), then this would be the best way to play the game. Like many other parts of Total War, creating the UI is a long and somewhat complicated process, so it is a bit hard to reproduce here. Suffice it to say the UI is very much a living thing, and the UI team is really really good at what they do. I'm not sure how much of what we do can be attributed to... I don't know. Maybe 10%? And then there are the other 90% that is really into things like how the kill list is displayed, or how a unit will react to being cut off. Although I am not an economist, my intuitively understanding human history is that states do not go to war unless they want to win. The concept of winning is not necessarily aligned with power or land or anything like that, and so with the relatively simple cost-benefit analysis of winning relative to the expected costs of losing, states will tend to try to avoid war. This is exactly the same way that I would try to avoid war. 5ec8ef588b
