Yes, it is tough to find activities that utilize the new touch features of the iPad. Even casual games, while able to use iPad's new sensors and extra horsepower, tend to feel very unpolished. It was a surprise, then, when I found out that Adobe had made a few really nice games for the iPad. Our first look revealed a clever and colorful game that can be played both on the big screen as well as on the iPad. In fact, it is possible to combine both when playing the Game Center game on the big screen. We especially liked the clever hidden object game, in which the player must find and utilize the clues scattered throughout the rooms. Hopefully, we will get even more interesting titles in 2016. The iPad Pro has a FireWire 800 port, which is great for video editing and not bad for storing digital photos either. The 9.7-inch display of the iPad Pro is very nice as well: it produces sharp images and it can be used in direct sunlight. You get a bright retina display in a slim body that is comfortable to hold and easy to carry everywhere.
