The features of collagen-based materials that make them potential candidates for guided bone regeneration. The purpose of this review is to highlight the current state-of-the-art of novel biologically active and biocompatible biomaterials for guided tissue regeneration (GTR) applications. One of the challenges in the field of GTR is the production of biomaterials that maintain their functional and structural integrity in the host's environment. This review discusses the challenges and disadvantages associated with current collagen-based GTR materials, and highlights the various approaches that have been proposed and successfully applied to improve the functionality of collagen-based GTR materials. Specifically, this review discusses the function of collagen-based biomaterials as substrate for functional cell
