This gave professionals and individuals the opportunity to revisit Elements periodically. The future of Photoshop development is looking bright. The Elements experience format is similar to the new way that Photoshop will be delivered moving forward. If you're a designer looking to optimize your workflow, consider checking out the modern streaming-based PC editor from DERIAs . With an intuitive interface, modern design, and robust resources, this is the editor to watch in 2020. This is reminiscent of the Elements format that has been in place for the last decade. That means for Photoshop users, there will be a small update and hopefully a vastly improved experience moving forward. The longer-term future of the platform is still very much up in the air. Adobe has also made a big push into the realm of AI and machine learning with a new feature called Sensei. Photoshop effects such as image stabilization, auto exposure and auto focus are extensions of this AI technology. Photoshop Sensei can perform on-the-fly image recognition, filter your selections and make quick decisions on your behalf. It can even suggest a creative and artistic way to improve your images. Adobe Sensei offers new AI-powered features to further improve the user experience. Sensei is an artificial intelligence engine that uses deep learning to bring people together to accelerate AI research, development and delivery, and will be integrated with Photoshop to offer new creative and productivity capabilities. This new functionality allows Photoshop to offer a more intelligent workflow for the user and also allows Photoshop to access and integrate a broader set of data from a variety of digital sources. Adobe is also setting up a new group that will oversee the feature rollout for Elements and Photoshop. This new entity, which includes the Photoshop and Lightroom teams, will oversee the tool updates as well as the user interface changes over time. \"My role in the new group is to work with the creative teams to ensure that we can take advantage of the new technology in mind-blowing ways,\" says Adobe's senior director of content creation, Seamus Byrne. Byrne is the first to take a neural-net-based AI to create the actual pixel values in the new filters. \"I think that the filters are going to be something that just really blows people's minds,\" he says.
