First things first I'm coming from Lightroom .5 (at time of writing 5.1) – which is a different kettle of fish! Went from CS3 to LR and immediately learned to love it as a merging of photoshop and Lightroom – all workflow needs are covered, so "it just works"! I wanted to love Elements as well, but I just found it difficult to sort through the features and functions etc and had to hold out a while before it clicked! No place like home for the learning curve!

So when 5.1 hit I upgraded asap – and was immediately delighted with the efficiency of adoption and management of assets – again, it really was right there and "just works".

This 5.2 is the proverbial icing on the cake – I find it far more efficient and the ability to create and manage scenes and panorama etc while editing is simply exhilarating. I have dozens of tutorials waiting to be created, so no doubt the learning curve will be steep, and steep it is – but I strongly believe that over time ability will match the initial heady rush of adoption. Difficulties in the transition will be addressed and smoothed out I hope!

I would certainly recommend learning both and seeing which suits and fits best for your situation!

It is an absolute joy and I believe it has certainly levelled the playing field, plus now with integration with Lightroom "assets" and preset/web based galleries etc – it's a joy to work with!

As I'm sure others will say, I'm a bit spoiled – so I'm holding out for "Bridge" integration, and disabling UI elements to ease the transition – and I find that using the Development features gives me that opportunity. Hope this panoply of learning is a help to those in need of a review – all the best!

Adobe has made the almost impossible to replace the RAM in their computers. Luckily if you notice that your computer is having trouble with RAM it is super simple to fix and upgrade (if you can afford to do so) by installing more RAM. Check each layer of the RAM, one at a time to make sure your RAM is working smoothly. If your ram is full of dust and the computer is still running slow then try to clean it out. Maybe you have plenty of RAM but not enough free space to to run your applications. Eventually you'll want more RAM than you have and this cost is a one time expense. 933d7f57e6
