Apologies if my fingers aren't good enough to do some of these amazing photomontages. I love interactive photo editor or we say timelines. Nowadays, many design lovers love it and for some professionals is indispensable. The month of June was and is a window to the world of creative masterpiece. New faces were to be born, old faces discovered. And what about the European version? Up to now, we are doing the most important test of the training. It is only at the beginning but we are optimistic. A few members of the community have submitted their mockups for review. Our focus initially will be on mobile devices. Although it is still in Beta, the beta version of Lightroom 5.0 is already up and running. "Put your best face forward in Lightroom 5 beta with Real-time Cloning" reads the headline. The feature here is the "Real-Time Cloning" that, among other things, enables you to create a duplicate Workflow that is identical to the basic one with the Custom Presets. While it doesn't add a lot of value to what you have before, it is as advertised. With 35,000 custom presets, I have no need to transfer my default ones to the new version, and so I'm not going to worry about making the new custom presets. It is good to know this new feature, but I think that the developers could have allowed this feature some more freedom to work as it works as a powerful setting manager because of the Retouch area. The other update in this new version is Ambience Portrait. It provides a pretty good adjustment to allow portrait images to have better skin complexion. This update really shows that the developers are sticking to their previous philosophy in updating Lightroom. That is, they are willing to update the software as they write new features they think will have maximum appeal to new customers. The updates of Lightroom 5 are pretty decent, but they are not enough to bring in new revenue.
