Ask HN: Best way to move from hobbyist to professional? - code777777 I'm a 29 year old developer based in San Francisco and I have been coding as a hobby for a few years. I have recently started to get into app development full-time (without having a formal CS degree).I want to leave my startup and move into a company to pursue app development as a career. What are some of the best ways to move from hobbyist to pro (i.e., interview and salary)? How can I start to make myself marketable in my area and make a living from this?Any advice is appreciated. ====== a3n It's a bit of a chicken-and-egg situation. As a hobbyist, if you're happy with the recognition you get from building something you love, then your career is already built. To get a job, you need to develop what you want, and sell yourself in a way that convinces someone else that you're worth the money you're asking for, and that you're worth bringing in more than paying someone else. Those goals are going to be very different things. If you're more convinced of your skills in one area than you are in the other, you
